

Buddhism makes a distinction between matter and consciousness, where the basis of matter are empty "space particles" from which are other particles, and thus the physical universe, is formed. The Mind of "clear light" is the basis for consciousness. We can look to both as holons with a different structure (of membrane layers). Individual consciousness is only possible in systems where clear light interacts with space particles. However the "clear light" actions can also be seen as the vibrations of the membrane itself. Since all holons are made of membrane layers the property of consciousness is then automatically incorporated in the space particles.

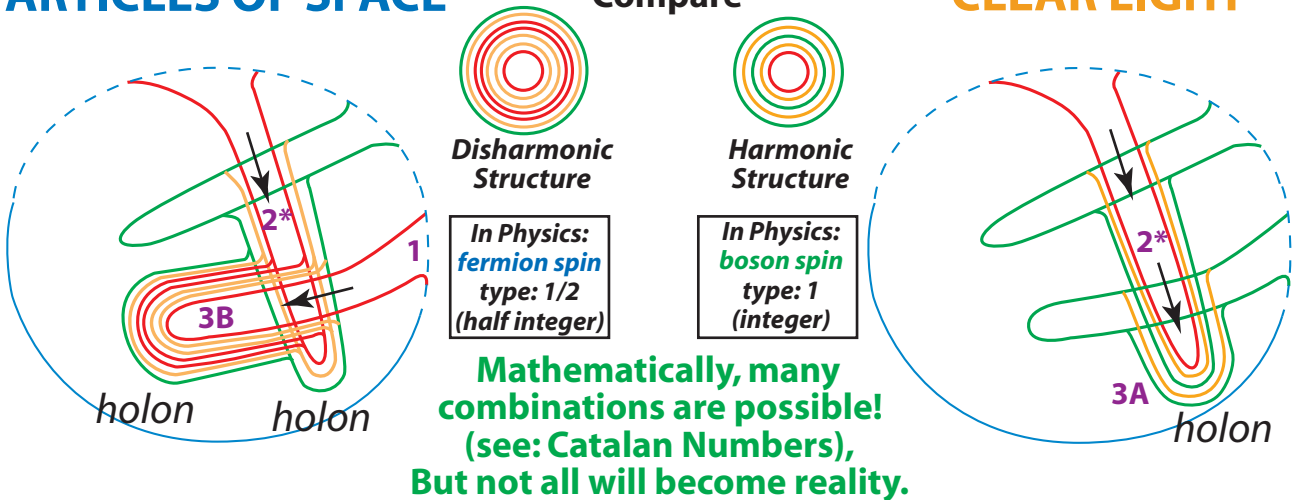

More Layers = Higher Density MATTER-Like

Less Layers = Higher Flexibility SPIRITUAL-Like
